

Divine Ethics Review

New course extract first: planning, sincerity, trust, gratitude, prayer and repentance

Updated 17 September 2026

Nine focused topics from the twelve teaching pages actually supplied. The first three PDF pages are a contents list, not the full chapters. The older nineteen-page course packet remains a separately labeled background section in the review. No official exam weighting or answer key has been supplied.

How to use this book

Lecture-grounded material and book extensions are distinguished. Green/blue panels consolidate the key ideas; amber panels flag missing evidence; orange panels correct traps. This is a detailed review of the available sources, not an official exam blueprint.

Original lecture transcripts are preserved as PDF attachments and in the editable source folder when available. Automated transcripts can contain errors; study the checked synthesis first. Personal study only: original book/lecture illustrations retain their owners' rights.

SOURCE BASIS: All 15 new scan pages inspected; primary teaching is on PDF pages 4-15

Study the new material first

The first nine topic sections synthesize the latest download. The earlier 19-page packet is preserved afterward as separately labeled background, including self-building and additional prayer material. Neither scan is an authenticated past examination.

The scan is out of textbook order. Use the topic order below, and follow the PDF counter as well as the printed page number. The first three pages only list contents. A heading in that list does not establish that its full teaching is included or assigned.

Study topic	New PDF pages	Printed pages	Practice MCQs
Planning, organization and the value of time	4, 5	59, 60	10

Source limits are part of the study map

The new packet has twelve teaching pages, not a complete textbook. Book title, edition, exam weighting and an official answer key remain unconfirmed. Theological explanations below follow the course framework; they are not clinical diagnostic or treatment claims.

Planning, organization and the value of time

SOURCE BASIS: New course extract, page-image checked; synthesis in original wording

Core idea

Planning prepares a purposeful course of action. Organization puts it into practice at the proper time.

The daily bank analogy supplies 86,400 units that expire at the end of each day. Its referent is the 86,400 seconds in a day. Time is a limited opportunity for material and spiritual development, not a stock that can be carried into tomorrow. The lesson therefore connects valuing life with preparing and implementing a plan.

Planning means conceptualizing and preparing a suitable plan. Organization means implementing it. A list of goals without execution remains incomplete; activity without thoughtful priorities is not a substitute for planning. The cited letter to Malik al-Ashtar emphasizes doing each task in its proper place and time, avoiding both premature haste and laziness about tasks that can now be done.

Four planning principles are visible on printed page 60: time management, implementation, reflection, and seeking experienced advice. Time is allocated among worship/religious duties, work and obtaining life’s provisions, and permitted rest/leisure. These periods need not be equal. Their lengths depend on actual needs and priorities.

Implementation requires recognizing the suitable time, ranking tasks by priority and then acting at that time. Reflection draws on one’s own and others’ experience, considers present and future circumstances, and thinks through beginning and outcome. Good advisers combine knowledge and experience with understanding of one’s abilities; parents, competent scholars and relevant specialists are examples, not interchangeable authorities on every subject.

The first four characteristics shown are defined and prioritized goals; steps that actually serve those goals; a comprehensive plan covering responsibilities, activities and requirements; and moderation that matches capabilities with aspirations. The contents page locates additional planning material later, but those later pages were not supplied. Material and spiritual responsibilities both belong in the plan.

Distinction	What it means
Planning	Preparation and conceptualization
Organization	Implementation of the plan
Reflection	Experience, foresight and likely consequences

Distinction	What it means
Comprehensiveness	Include all relevant responsibilities
Moderation	Balance aspirations with real capabilities

Do not confuse these

Three time categories do not mean three equal eight-hour blocks. A detailed timetable can still be a poor plan if its activities do not serve its goals.

Check yourself: What are the four planning principles on the supplied page?

Time management, implementation, reflection, and mentors/seeking advice.

Check yourself: How does comprehensiveness differ from moderation?

Comprehensiveness avoids omitted responsibilities. Moderation makes the whole plan realistic relative to needs and capabilities.

Sincerity, ostentation and dependent means

SOURCE BASIS: New course extract, page-image checked; synthesis in original wording

Core idea

A good-looking action and a sincere intention are different questions. Using a human means does not itself mean treating it as independent of God.

The extract distinguishes apparent polytheism, understood in the text as acknowledging multiple gods or worshipping other beings, from hidden polytheism: verbally acknowledging one God while attributing independent efficacy to another being. The operative qualification is independence. Asking a person for help, taking a loan or using a natural means is not by itself the belief being criticized.

Ostentation means showing off through worship or apparently good deeds for worldly recognition or advantage. The examples include prayer to gain a superior's favor or a pay rise, pilgrimage to gain respect, and helping poor people in order to attract praise. Outward correctness does not establish a pure motive. Conversely, visibility alone does not establish ostentation; the stem must give evidence about the intention.

The course describes ostentation as a form of hidden association and as harmful rather than morally neutral. Some forms are subtle and require introspection, self-purification and sustained effort to recognize and address. One should not infer a stranger's inward motive merely from a public action.

Sincerity purifies action from non-divine motives and has degrees. The supplied conclusion presents love of God, attention to His blessings and attributes, and obedience as the way to deepen it. Printed page 57, listed under levels of intention, is not present; a complete taxonomy of those levels cannot be recovered from this scan.

Distinction	What it means
Apparent polytheism	Explicitly directing divine worship elsewhere in this account
Hidden polytheism	Treating another cause as independent of God
Ordinary means	Seeking help while recognizing dependence
Ostentation	Acting for display, praise or worldly advantage
Sincerity	Purifying the purpose of one's action

Do not confuse these

Do not confuse a public act with an act performed for publicity. Do not confuse seeking help with attributing independent divine power.

Check yourself: Why is borrowing money not automatically hidden polytheism?

The distinction concerns belief in independent power, not the mere use of a human means.

Check yourself: Can an outwardly good deed have a defective motive?

Yes. The text's examples distinguish beneficial appearance from a purpose centered on praise or advantage.

Seven practices for cultivating sincerity

SOURCE BASIS: New course extract, page-image checked; synthesis in original wording

Core idea

Change the intention and the habits that feed display, rather than merely changing who sees the action.

The seven numbered practices are: cultivate love of God; reflect on the impermanence of everything else; recognize the damage caused by ostentation; conceal worship where appropriate rather than publicize it; practice unobtrusive worship such as fasting; use meaningful remembrance, particularly la ilaha illa Allah; and recognize obedience as one's own responsibility whose benefit returns to oneself rather than demanding reward from other people.

The first practice redirects ambition through love. The second contrasts transient human status and advantage with the enduring divine witness; the page mentions remembrance of death and graves as reminders of impermanence. The third stresses that ostentation harms the deed and the person, rather than simply adding no extra merit.

Concealing worship is an exercise against attention-seeking, not a statement that all public worship is invalid. Fasting is used as an example because others may not know of it unless told. For la ilaha illa Allah, the passage emphasizes both the meaning of divine unity and its unobtrusive recitation: it specifically notes that the lips need not meet as the tongue moves. The point is inward sincerity, not a mechanical guarantee produced by sounds.

The final practice rejects performing obligations as a transaction for praise or repayment from observers. Together these practices act on the source of motivation, the imagined value of approval and the behaviors that advertise oneself.

Distinction	What it means
Love	Reorients what is ultimately sought
Impermanence	Reduces dependence on fleeting approval
Recognizing harm	Exposes display as an ethical problem
Concealment and fasting	Reduce opportunities for self-advertising
Meaningful dhikr and duty	Connect attention to the purpose of action

Do not confuse these

Privacy can assist sincerity, but it is not a substitute for it. A concealed act can still be planned as a later story to gain praise.

Check yourself: Name all seven practices without looking.

Love of God; impermanence; recognizing ostentation's harm; concealing worship; fasting; meaningful la ilaha illa Allah; fulfilling duty without demanding human recompense.

Check yourself: Why does the source recommend fasting here?

It offers an opportunity to worship without others knowing unless the person announces it.

Trust in God, effort and five signs

SOURCE BASIS: New course extract, page-image checked; synthesis in original wording

Core idea

Tawakkul combines responsible effort with reliance on God. It does not make effort or natural means unnecessary.

Printed page 52 explicitly rejects handing over one's responsibilities while remaining idle. The farmers who stopped farming are criticized for laziness, not praised as exemplary reliance. The source presents effort as a means of realizing capacities and developing individuals and society. Its criticism is of avoidable idleness, not a judgment on people unable to work.

The theological explanation for trust is that natural causes have capacities granted by God rather than independent power. Water, food and medicine illustrate means that should still be used. Within this account, reliance and practical action operate together. This is not an instruction to abandon evidence-based care or a guarantee that a particular medicine always works.

Five signs are listed on printed page 54: hopeful reliance on God; dignified confidence rather than subservient fear of others or difficulties; serious effort toward goals; freedom from greed and consuming preoccupation with sustenance; and peace/happiness. Reliance does not demand refusing ordinary assistance or denying one's needs.

The camel example joins tying the camel with trust. It is an applied test of using means, not an argument for leaving the animal unsecured. The conclusion describes degrees of trust, including reliance across all affairs, and locates it in conviction in divine unity. The umbrella story on printed page 52 illustrates confidence in supplication; it is not a rule that prayer guarantees immediate rain.

Distinction	What it means
Tawakkul	Reliance plus responsible use of means
Passivity	Neglect of a responsibility excused as faith
Independent causation	What the theological explanation denies
Dependent causation	Real means whose ability depends on God
Confidence	A spiritual orientation, not proof of immunity to hardship

Do not confuse these

Serious effort is itself on the five-sign list. A person's anxiety or hardship is not enough to diagnose absent faith.

Check yourself: How do the farmers and camel examples express the same distinction?

Both reject abandoning an available practical responsibility in the name of trust.

Check yourself: List the five signs.

Hopeful reliance, dignified confidence, serious effort, freedom from greed/preoccupation with sustenance, and peace/happiness.

Remembrance of the heart and the apple case

SOURCE BASIS: New course extract, page-image checked; synthesis in original wording

Core idea

Inward awareness is central and should shape behavior even without human witnesses.

The teacher asks each student to eat an apple where nobody can see. The favored student returns without eating because he finds no place outside God’s awareness. The case tests sustained awareness of divine presence rather than secrecy, obedience to an unseen police officer or skill at finding a hiding place.

The conclusion identifies remembrance of the heart as the most important form and says it prepares one to benefit from practical and verbal remembrance. Heart here means inward attention and orientation, not cardiac tissue. Speech, action and inward attention are connected rather than rival alternatives.

The source associates remembrance with release from excessive worldly preoccupation, spiritual growth and tranquility. These are teachings about spiritual life, not a diagnostic test or a promise that a clinical anxiety disorder will disappear. The new scan gives this conclusion and case, not the full preceding chapter.

Distinction	What it means
Heart	Inward awareness and attention
Practical remembrance	Conduct expressing that awareness
Verbal remembrance	Meaningful spoken recollection
Apple case	Accountability beyond visible human observation

Do not confuse these

A lack of human witnesses does not remove accountability in the case. Reciting words alone is not the inward attention the conclusion prioritizes.

Check yourself: What is the precise lesson of the uneaten apple?

Awareness of God persists where human observers are absent.

Check yourself: How are the three forms related?

Inward remembrance is central and supports meaningful verbal and practical expression.

Gratitude in recognition, speech and action

SOURCE BASIS: New course extract, page-image checked; synthesis in original wording

Core idea

Practical gratitude uses a blessing well; thanks to God do not cancel gratitude to a human benefactor.

The first level recognizes a blessing and appreciates its worth. The second expresses thanks verbally; al-hamdu lillah and shukran lillah are examples, especially in the prostration of thankfulness. The final, most important stage is practical thankfulness: using the blessing in a way pleasing to God. The sequence distinguishes awareness, expression and ethical use.

The concrete examples are speech used for good rather than backbiting or slander; sight kept from forbidden uses; feet not used to enter sinful settings; beauty accompanied by chastity; wealth used without waste and with help for the needy; and knowledge or a learned trade used in service. These are applications, not separate fourth or fifth levels.

God's lack of need means that giving thanks benefits and develops the grateful person; it does not supply a deficiency in God. Recognition and words remain important, but a person who praises a blessing while misusing it has not completed practical gratitude.

Printed page 47 also discusses a human benefactor's right: thank them, acknowledge them respectfully, pray sincerely for their good and repay kindness when able. These obligations coexist with divine gratitude. The opening of the grape-gift case contrasts contempt with appreciation; its continuation is missing, so no further ending is asserted.

Distinction	What it means
Recognition	Notice and value the gift
Verbal gratitude	Express thanks
Practical gratitude	Use the gift responsibly
Human benefactor	Acknowledge, pray for and reciprocate kindness when able

Do not confuse these

Owning resources or saying a phrase is not the same as using a blessing well. Practical gratitude does not erase respectful verbal thanks.

Check yourself: Why is serving others with knowledge practical gratitude?

It applies the received ability in a beneficial way rather than only admiring or describing it.

Check yourself: What duties to a benefactor are named?

Verbal thanks, respectful acknowledgment, sincere prayer for their good and repayment when able.

Gratitude’s effects and five obstacles

SOURCE BASIS: New course extract, page-image checked; synthesis in original wording

Core idea

A blessing’s possession and its grateful use are distinct. Even the capacity to give thanks is treated as a further blessing.

The chapter associates gratitude with increased blessings and warns that ingratitude can lead to a blessing being taken away. This ethical warning is not a method of identifying why a particular person suffered a loss. The chapter then explains that the very ability to thank is another gift, so one never becomes a fully self-sufficient giver who has exhausted all reasons for gratitude. The resulting chain motivates continuing humility and thankfulness, not giving up because perfect repayment is impossible.

Five obstacles are named: failing to recognize blessings; recognizing and then forgetting them; envy of what others have; greed or dissatisfaction with one’s own share; and a generally negative outlook. Non-recognition differs from forgetting, and envy of another’s gifts differs from insatiable demand for more for oneself.

The page pairs patience in difficulty with gratitude in blessing. It distinguishes general gifts available broadly from particular spiritual gifts. Abundance by itself does not establish spiritual success: a person may misuse continued prosperity and become more heedless. The text’s warning about misuse is not permission to infer a stranger’s moral standing from wealth or poverty.

The cited reminder that few servants are grateful is identified on printed page 49 as Quran 34:13. It supports attentiveness rather than a numerical estimate of good people. The conclusion joins heartfelt and practical thanks.

Distinction	What it means
Unrecognized gift	Its worth was never noticed
Forgotten gift	Once noticed, no longer attended to
Envy	Fixation on another person’s gifts
Greed/dissatisfaction	Insatiability about one’s own share
Negative outlook	Habitual failure to see good across life

Do not confuse these

Increase in possessions is not an automatic certificate of gratitude or divine approval. Do not reverse the source’s ethical teaching into a judgment of someone’s circumstances.

Check yourself: What are all five obstacles?

Non-recognition, forgetting, envy, greed/dissatisfaction and a negative outlook.

Check yourself: Why thank God for being thankful?

The source treats the ability and opportunity to express gratitude as a further blessing.

Prayer, effort and a wise response

SOURCE BASIS: New course extract, page-image checked; synthesis in original wording

Core idea

Supplication expresses dependence and accompanies striving. An answer is not defined solely by receiving the exact object requested.

The page connects prayer with knowledge of God as the source of perfection and material and spiritual benefits. The person presents needs to God and strives toward the objective. Reliance does not remove effort. Attaining a goal may deepen faith, while non-attainment need not destroy hope in divine goodness.

Five effects are listed: remembrance and proximity to God with His love; protection from possible difficulties; rescue from enemies; increased sustenance; and purification from sins. Study them as the course's spiritual teaching, not a guarantee of a specified outcome on demand. Quran 25:77 and 40:60 are cited in the page's introductory panel.

The account of an answer emphasizes wisdom. A response may come through ordinary material means or extraordinary means. A person asking for relief from poverty may not become rich; the page discusses both absent effort and the possibility that the requested outcome would be harmful. These are possible explanations in the teaching, not grounds for claiming knowledge of why a particular person suffers.

The mother-and-knife analogy shows why refusing the exact object can express care rather than indifference. The scan ends before the example finishes, so only the visible contrast is used. Detailed etiquette, recommended times/places and further discussion appear in the older packet or in contents headings, not on this new page.

Distinction	What it means
Supplication	Present needs and express reliance
Striving	Use available means toward the goal
Wise response	May differ from the requested object
Non-attainment	Does not by itself identify wrongdoing or rejection

Do not confuse these

“My precise request was not fulfilled” does not logically establish “God did not respond” within this account.

Check yourself: List the five effects named here.

Remembrance/proximity/love; protection; rescue from enemies; increased sustenance; purification from sins.

Check yourself: What does the knife analogy illustrate?

A requested object can be withheld for the recipient’s good.

Immediate repentance, habits and moral development

SOURCE BASIS: New course extract, page-image checked; synthesis in original wording

Core idea

Prompt correction interrupts the growth of harmful habits. Delay is risky both because habits deepen and because future time is uncertain.

The extract urges repentance at the first opportunity. Repeated wrong actions can become entrenched habits that affect conduct and disposition, making later rectification more difficult. The second argument is uncertainty about how much life remains: an intention to repent later does not ensure the opportunity will remain.

The illness-and-medicine comparison is a moral metaphor: sin damages the soul and repentance counters it. It is not a medical diagnosis or a treatment claim. The page places the opportunity for repentance in earthly life, stating that its door closes at death and afterward. The discussion also explains why small, sustained good actions may develop a person more effectively than an impressive act that is immediately abandoned.

The passage attributed to Murtaza Mutahhari likens earthly moral development to fruit ripening while attached to its tree. Once detached, the opportunity for that kind of growth ends. The further point is that regret after seeing inevitable consequences is not the same as a free inward moral transformation during life.

This supplied page argues for immediacy; it does not supply the complete elements of repentance or a list distinguishing minor and major sins. Those appear in contents headings but their detailed pages are absent. Do not invent their contents or treat postponement as harmless simply because repentance is emphasized.

Distinction	What it means
Delay	Allows habit to deepen and risks losing the opportunity

Distinction	What it means
Immediate repentance	Begins correction while change remains possible
Steady good practice	Forms and reinforces a constructive disposition
Fruit analogy	Illustrates the limited period for moral development

Do not confuse these

Difficulty in changing a habit is an argument to begin sooner, not evidence that change during life is impossible.

Check yourself: What are the two reasons against delay?

Wrongdoing can become habitual, and the time available before death is uncertain.

Check yourself: Why is post-consequence regret distinguished from repentance here?

The passage contrasts compelled reaction to visible consequences with inward moral transformation during earthly life.

Cross-topic reasoning and the missing-page boundary

SOURCE BASIS: Synthesis across the supplied teaching pages, not an additional lecture

Case	Reasoned distinction
A student prays but makes no study plan.	Trust does not replace effort. Planning prepares the work; organization implements it.
A helpful act is visible to others.	Visibility alone does not establish ostentation. The intention to gain praise is the relevant distinction.
Someone gives thanks but uses knowledge to deceive.	Verbal gratitude has not become practical gratitude. The gift must be used responsibly.
A person is anxious or a precise prayer request is not fulfilled.	Neither observation alone establishes deficient faith or divine rejection. Do not infer hidden causes from an outcome.
Someone wants to delay changing a repeated wrong action.	The repentance page gives two objections: habits deepen and future opportunity is uncertain.
An unobserved act could gain a private advantage.	The apple case tests inward remembrance and accountability beyond human observation.

Check yourself: Why can using a cause be consistent with both sincerity and trust?

The sincerity passage distinguishes dependent means from attributing independent efficacy. The trust passage requires responsible use of means rather than passivity. Neither makes ordinary assistance a contradiction by itself.

Listed or interrupted material	Honest coverage boundary
Full self-building and piety chapters	Not supplied in the new scan. Earlier-packet self-building is retained separately.
Complete repentance elements; major/minor sins	Only the immediacy argument on printed page 35 is supplied.
Levels of intention on printed page 57	The conclusion supports degrees of sincerity, not an unseen complete taxonomy.
Remaining planning characteristics and success factors	Only the displayed first four characteristics and four principles are summarized.
Rights/social ethics chapters listed in the contents	Headings alone do not provide their teaching.
Grape-gift story and mother/knife analogy	Both are cut off. No unseen continuation is reconstructed.

If the lecturer confirms that the whole contents list is examinable, the absent pages are a real source gap to obtain. The current notes and 75 MCQs cover the supplied teaching, not every possible question in the underlying book.

Earlier packet: Self-knowledge and the purpose of self-building

SOURCE BASIS: Earlier 19-page course packet; retained background, not newly supplied September 17 pages

The course treats self-knowledge as the foundation of ethical self-building. To choose what improves a person, one must first understand the kind of being a person is and the purpose toward which life is directed. Its body-and-soul model uses a phone hardware/software analogy, while the story of the child trading a valuable diamond illustrates the cost of failing to recognize value.

- The guiding questions concern identity, origin, destination, body-soul relationship, death and the consequences of action.
- In this theological account, reason with knowledge leads the spiritual aspect, while unchecked passion with ignorance leads its opposing tendency.
- The examples of virtues include humility, truthfulness, modesty, trustworthiness, goodwill, trust in God and gratitude. Opposing tendencies include greed, envy, arrogance, oppression, deceit and ingratitude.
- Self-building combines avoiding harmful traits, acquiring good traits, and preserving virtues already present. It does not mean only creating a virtue from nothing.

Check yourself: Why is merely knowing an ethical definition insufficient for self-building?

The lesson requires deliberate choices and cultivated behavior. Knowledge identifies the direction, but vigilance and action sustain the quality.

Earlier packet: Daily practice, obstacles and the intended outcome

SOURCE BASIS: Earlier 19-page course packet; retained background, not newly supplied September 17 pages

Stage	Task	Purpose
Beginning of day	Make a clear commitment to desirable conduct and avoidance of wrong action	Establish an intention and a standard
During the day	Observe conduct and remain faithful to the commitment	Translate intention into choices
At night	Review actions, acknowledge success and seek correction for lapses	Learn and renew the next day's commitment

The chief obstacle named is heedlessness: failing to attend to oneself, one's conduct and its consequences. The intended outcome is proximity to God, explained in moral and spiritual terms rather than physical distance.

Safe interpretation of self-correction

The source mentions self-imposed punishment. These notes do not recommend self-harm or deprivation. A constructive application is reflection, restitution, a realistic revised commitment and support when needed.

Earlier packet: Remembrance of God: heart, action and speech

SOURCE BASIS: Earlier 19-page course packet; retained background, not newly supplied September 17 pages

Category	Meaning in the source	Relationship
Remembrance of the heart	Inward attention and awareness of God	The central form, expected to influence behavior
Practical or physical remembrance	Avoiding disapproved conduct and acting consistently with faith	A behavioral expression of inward attention
Verbal remembrance	Meaningful recitation with understanding and attention	Can prepare and reinforce inward remembrance

Here heart denotes the inward reality of the person, not the anatomical organ. The apple story tests awareness of divine presence even when other people are absent. The lesson associates remembrance with spiritual tranquility and reduced attachment to distractions.

Check yourself: A person recites words but acts without regard to their meaning. Which distinction explains the problem?

Verbal remembrance is being separated from attention of the heart and its expected practical expression.

Examples of verbal dhikr explicitly listed on PDF p. 15 are la ilaha illa Allah, subhan Allah, al-hamdu lillah, Allahumma salli ala Muhammadin wa Al-i Muhammad, and astaghfirullah. In the source, the point is not sound alone: attention to meaning should support inward awareness and conduct. Transliteration varies; use the original page for its precise wording.

Earlier packet: Trust in God and the use of means

SOURCE BASIS: Earlier 19-page course packet; retained background, not newly supplied September 17 pages

Tawakkul is reliance on God alongside the use of knowledge, ability, resources and effort. The lesson contrasts it with two extremes: passive dependence on other people and proud reliance on oneself as completely sufficient. Trust is presented as confidence in a benevolent, knowledgeable and powerful God while carrying out one's responsibilities.

- The camel example means taking the practical precaution while trusting God. It does not endorse abandoning the precaution.
- The farmers story rejects inactivity excused as trust. Effort is part of the lesson's account of human development.
- The text links certainty in divine unity to recognition that natural causes are not independent of God. This is a theological causal account, not a reason to stop using effective medical care.
- Signs named include hopeful reliance, confidence rather than fear, serious effort, freedom from greed, and peace.
- The central spiritual result is relationship with and love of God. Stories of Yusuf and Badr illustrate the course's teaching about reliance and assistance.

Do not overgeneralize historical or health claims

The scanned page gives particular numbers for the Badr narrative and strong language about removing anxiety. These are source-specific teaching claims, not independently verified historical statistics or a clinical promise that faith eliminates an anxiety disorder.

Check yourself: Why is not studying for an exam and saying I trust God inconsistent with this lesson?

Tawakkul includes preparation and responsible effort. It does not transfer one's practical responsibilities away.

Earlier packet: Prayer, dependence and the meaning of an answer

SOURCE BASIS: Earlier 19-page course packet; retained background, not newly supplied September 17 pages

The course presents supplication as worship and an expression of dependence on God. It emphasizes access to God and the presentation of needs. Its conclusion distinguishes a response to prayer from receiving exactly the requested object: divine wisdom and the person's good are part of the explanation.

- Reasons listed for a request not being fulfilled include injustice, unlawful wealth, persistent wrongdoing, lack of concentration, disobedience to parents, and asking without working toward the goal.
- The source also says non-fulfillment need not imply wrongdoing. A request may be harmful, inconsistent with wisdom, delayed, or associated with a different reward.
- Times specifically listed on PDF p. 17: Thursday night and Friday; nights and days of Qadr; nights of Ramadan; Eid al-Fitr, Eid al-Adha and Eid al-Ghadir; recitation of the adhan or Quran; falling rain or blowing wind; after dawn and before sunrise; and morning. These are the supplied text's recommended occasions, not newly verified historical or doctrinal claims.
- Places named on PDF p. 17 include mosques, especially the Sacred Mosque; the location rendered in the scan as the "rock of Ismail"; the station of Abraham; the Kaaba sanctuary; al-Sahlah Mosque; Mina and Arafat; and graves of revered persons, including the Prophet and his family, particularly Imam al-Husayn ibn Ali. Preserve the source's own terminology for literal course recall; the scan's English place-name translation is not independently authenticated.

Important distinction

The source does not justify blaming a person for illness or hardship by assuming that an unanswered prayer proves wrongdoing. It explicitly allows other explanations.

Check yourself: Why can hope in divine mercy remain central when a requested outcome does not occur?

In the lesson's argument, divine response is evaluated through wisdom and benefit, not solely by immediate receipt of the exact request.

Earlier packet: Blessings and the levels of gratitude

SOURCE BASIS: Earlier 19-page course packet; retained background, not newly supplied September 17 pages

The lesson distinguishes widespread blessings such as life, bodily capacities and the natural environment from more particular blessings such as guidance, wisdom and supportive relationships. It treats gratitude toward God as compatible with a real obligation to thank people who help us.

Level	Meaning	Example
Recognition	Notice the blessing and appreciate its worth	Recognize the value of health, knowledge or assistance

Level	Meaning	Example
Verbal gratitude	Express thanks sincerely	Thank the helper and express gratitude to God
Practical gratitude	Use the blessing in an appropriate way	Use knowledge to serve, speech truthfully, and wealth without waste while helping others

- Practical gratitude is emphasized as the most consequential expression, rather than a mere phrase.
- Obstacles listed are failure to recognize blessings, forgetting them, envy of others, greed/dissatisfaction and a negative outlook.
- The lesson associates gratitude with an increase in blessings and treats the capacity to give thanks as itself a blessing.
- Possession of resources alone is not evidence of spiritual success. The source distinguishes having a gift from using it well.
- Patience is the response to difficulty, while gratitude is the response to blessings. These are complementary, not competing, qualities.

Check yourself: How does serving others with medical knowledge illustrate practical gratitude?

It applies a received ability in a beneficial and responsible way, while recognition or verbal appreciation alone would not ensure that use.

PDF p. 11 also spells out duties toward a human benefactor: express thanks, acknowledge the person respectfully, sincerely pray for their good, and repay the kindness when able. Gratitude toward God does not cancel these interpersonal obligations. The source's grape-gift story contrasts appreciative response with contempt for an offered gift; it should not be generalized into a judgment that a person with unmet needs is morally at fault.

Earlier packet: Integrated ethical comparisons

SOURCE BASIS: Earlier 19-page course packet; retained background, not newly supplied September 17 pages

Concept	Central question	Frequent confusion
Self-knowledge	What am I and what truly benefits me?	Confusing self-awareness with mere self-approval
Self-building	What virtues should I acquire, preserve or restore?	Only condemning faults without developing action
Dhikr	Does inward attention shape speech and conduct?	Reducing remembrance to unconsidered repetition
Tawakkul	Do I act responsibly while relying on God?	Using reliance as an excuse for inactivity
Supplication	How do I express need and hope?	Treating a specific immediate outcome as guaranteed
Gratitude	How do I recognize and use a blessing?	Equating possession, praise or words with ethical use

The original scan is not in textbook order: prayer appears before self-building, and pages on gratitude and trust are interleaved. This review restores conceptual order while keeping the original PDF page references.

Coverage limits and next sources

- No title/copyright page is included. Exact book title, edition and authorship are not asserted from the contents list alone.
- Piety, detailed repentance elements, levels of intention, later planning factors and social-ethics chapters appear in the contents but their full teaching pages are absent from this new extract.
- Printed pages 47 and 40 end during examples. Their unseen continuations are not reconstructed.
- Narrations are studied as cited by the course, not newly authenticated hadith. Spiritual outcomes are not clinical guarantees or a basis for blaming a person for illness or hardship.
- These are newly authored practice MCQs. A file named Exam PDF can still contain textbook pages; neither teaching scan establishes an authentic past-paper question bank.
- No lecture recording/transcript accompanies the new extract. The review paraphrases the source rather than inventing a lecture transcript.
- The original 19-page packet remains separately labeled background. Its older filename includes Exam PDF but is not evidence of a past examination.
- The September 17 expansion received an author-performed source-page and formatting check, not a separate independent theological review.
