

1. what is the primary focus of a Terminological Definition of a religious concept like dīn (religion)?

- A) Explaining its historical roots and development across different languages.
- B) Describing the personal, emotional state of reverence (like khashiat) it inspires.
- C) Specifying its precise and standardized meaning within the framework of religious doctrine.
- D) Listing all the various meanings it has in general-use dictionaries.

2. what is presented as the core argument for the divine origin of religion (dīn)?

- A) It has existed since ancient times in scriptures like the Avesta.
- B) It is fundamentally about believing in an ever-living God who rules the world.
- C) Only the Creator of a perfect universe could author a perfect, error-free system of law for humanity.
- D) It represents humanity's own attempt to discover the complete truth of what is good.

3. According to the text's technical (terminological) definition, what is the core requirement for a person or belief system to be considered "religious"?

- A) Practicing specific rituals and prescribed actions.
- B) Having a belief in a Creator of humanity and the universe.
- C) Following one of the specific "Revealed Religions" like Islam or Christianity.
- D) Possessing a complete "divine worldview" and a corresponding ideology.

4. Based on the text, how does the book define the relationship between "Worldview" (Naẓar-i jahān) and "Ideology" (Idīyūlūzhī) in an Islamic context?

A) They are completely separate; worldview deals with beliefs, and ideology deals only with specific laws.

B) Worldview corresponds to the Principles of Religion (beliefs), while Ideology corresponds to the Branches of Religion (practical rules).

C) Ideology is a broader term that fully encompasses and replaces the need for a specific worldview.

D) Worldview includes the practical rules of behavior, while ideology explains the fundamental beliefs about creation.

5. The text states that all Revealed Religions share three common fundamental principles. Which of the following is NOT one of those three?

A) Belief in One God (Tawḥīd)

B) Belief in the Hereafter and Divine Recompense (Ma'ād)

C) Belief in the socio-political leadership of Imams (Imāmah)

D) Belief in the Prophets sent for guidance (Nubuwwah)

6. what is the primary cause given for the existence of polytheism and religious distortion in human history?

A) The gradual evolution of human thought and society.

B) The inherent complexity of metaphysical reality.

C) Human beings following their own desires instead of true divine guidance.

D) The influence of materialistic philosophies like dialectical materialism.

7. the "Intrinsic Nature" (fitrah) is described as a fundamental driver for religious inquiry. Which of the following best captures the initial, innate quality of this fitrah as presented?

- A) A conscious desire to achieve worldly success and avoid material loss.
- B) A "sense of curiosity" that compels humans to ponder religious questions.
- C) An innate knowledge of specific religious doctrines and prophets.
- D) A fear of punishment in the afterlife for moral failures.

8. The text discusses two factors that encourage a person to seek the truth of religion. How does it characterize the role of "Human's desires" in this search?

- A) They are divine impulses that directly lead one to pure faith.
- B) They are obstacles that must be completely eliminated before true religious understanding can begin.
- C) They can be worldly motivations that, if religion is seen as a means to fulfill them without loss, can inspire further religious investigation.
- D) They are irrelevant to the search for religious truth, which is solely a matter of intellectual reasoning.

9. How can worldly desires positively contribute to a person's journey toward religion?

- A) They are transformed into divine virtues by the act of religious investigation.
- B) They are seen as the primary and only legitimate reason for seeking faith.
- C) If religion is perceived as a way to achieve worldly goals safely, it can motivate further inquiry.
- D) They must be completely fulfilled before one can begin to consider spiritual matters.

10. The text acknowledges that some people avoid investigating religion due to specific concerns. Which of the following is NOT listed as a potential reason for this avoidance?

- A) Laziness or apathy.
- B) Fear that religion will impose unwanted restrictions.
- C) A belief that the investigation will not yield useful or sufficient results.
- D) A conscious and rational rejection of the concept of God.

11. In the analogy used in the text, an individual who is indifferent to religion due to laziness or fear of restrictions is compared to:

- A) A shrewd investor who carefully weighs risks and rewards.
- B) A mature adult who has logically rejected superstition.
- C) A sick child who avoids the doctor for fear of bitter medicine.
- D) A scientist engaged in a lengthy but worthwhile research project.

12. How does the text's "business probability" argument (comparing Business A and Business B) seek to justify the importance of religious inquiry?

- A) It proves that religious investigation has a 100% success rate.
- B) It argues that even a weak chance of an infinite benefit (eternal happiness) makes the investigation supremely valuable.
- C) It shows that material profits from religion are guaranteed to be higher than from any other venture.
- D) It demonstrates that resolving religious issues is always quicker than resolving scientific ones.

13. According to the first section, why is the benefit of religion for the Hereafter considered to be of fundamental importance?

A) Because worldly life can be managed without religion, but eternal life in the Hereafter depends on the beliefs and actions of this world.

B) Because the benefits of religion in this world are more immediate and tangible than its spiritual promises.

C) Because the Quran explicitly states that only religious rituals guarantee success in the Hereafter.

D) Because belief in the Hereafter is optional, while belief in God is the only absolute requirement.

14. The "Sense of Support" section argues that in moments of distress, a believer turns to God as a constant ally. Which Quranic verse cited in the text best supports this idea of exclusive divine rescue?

A) The verse describing the light of the believers moving before them on the Day of Judgment.

B) The verse stating that all glory belongs to God, His Messenger, and the believers.

C) The verse questioning who rescues people from darkness when they call secretly, with the answer being God.

D) The verse explaining that people associate others with God even after being rescued.

15. Based on the "Religion and Responsibility" section, what is the primary mechanism by which religion prevents wrongdoing in a devout society?

A) The strict enforcement of human laws and the constant presence of authorities like police.

B) The creation of an "inner guardian" born from a sense of divine responsibility for all actions.

C) The promise of immediate worldly rewards for good behavior and social praise.

D) The focus on individual worship that is separate from social interactions and laws.

16. The text contrasts a religious society with one governed only by human laws. What example does it use to illustrate the limitation of human law?

A) A believer who refrains from injustice due to fear of eternal punishment.

B) A driver who stops at a red light only when a police officer is visible.

C) A person who feels alone and seeks constant support from other people.

D) An individual who maintains self-esteem by never asking anyone for help.

17. According to the lexical and explanatory definitions provided in the text, what is the key conceptual difference between "destiny" (taqdir) and "decree" (qada)?

A) Taqdir refers to God's final judgment, while qada is the initial measurement of all things.

B) Taqdir is the changeable, gradual planning stage, while qada is the inevitable, instantaneous fulfillment.

C) Taqdir and qada are completely synonymous and refer only to fixed fate.

D) Taqdir applies only to human actions, while qada applies only to natural phenomena.

18. The text distinguishes between the "Preserved Tablet" (al-Lawh al-Mahfuz) and lower tablets. What is described as the key characteristic of the information contained in the lower tablets?

C) It only contains information about past events, not the future.

D) It is accessible to everyone without divine permission.

19. what is the main theological problem addressed regarding human voluntary action and divine decree?

A) How God can know the future if humans have free will.

B) How a single action can depend on both human will and divine will without contradiction.

C) Why God allows evil actions if He has decreed everything.

D) Whether divine decree applies to non-believers or only to believers.

20. The text explains the relationship between multiple causes for a single effect. How does it describe the relationship between divine will and human will in voluntary actions?

A) They are independent and parallel causes that do not interact.

B) Human will operates completely outside the scope of divine will.

C) Human will and its existence are themselves dependent on divine will.

D) Divine will only takes effect if human will is absent or suspended.

21. the first intellectual reason presented, why is the infallibility of the prophets considered a fundamental requirement?

A) Because prophets must be superior to angels in knowledge and purity.

B) Because any possibility of error in receiving or transmitting revelation would break the chain of trust and corrupt the divine message.

C) Because prophets need to be physically strong to lead communities.

D) Because prophets must be able to perform miracles that ordinary humans cannot.

22. In the Qur'anic argument about Satan's refusal to mislead a certain group, what key term describes those who are divinely protected?

A) Mukhlas — those who have been purified by God.

B) Mukhlis — those who are sincere in worship.

C) Muttaqin — those who are God-conscious.

D) Muhsinin — those who do good deeds.

23. The second intellectual proof argues that prophets must be infallible because they are:

A) Political leaders who require unquestioned authority.

B) Required to know all worldly sciences perfectly.

C) Chosen only from among the wealthiest and most influential people.

D) Perfect educators who serve as examples for cultivating spiritual and moral excellence in others.

24. According to the traditional argument from Surah al-Nisā' (4:64), what is stated about obedience to the prophets?

A) Obedience to prophets is optional and dependent on personal interpretation.

B) Prophets were sent so that people could obey them by God's leave.

C) Obedience is only required when the prophet's command aligns with popular opinion.

D) Prophets must obey the people in matters of social governance.

25. What does the text say about the possibility of prophets making errors in minor everyday matters?

A) It is categorically denied — prophets are protected from all errors, major or minor.

B) Traditions on this issue are inconsistent and require further study, though it is not a core belief.

C) Only major sins are impossible for prophets; minor errors are permitted to show their humanity.

D) Prophets are only infallible when delivering revelation; at other times they are like ordinary people.

26. How does infallibility ('ismah) affect a prophet's free will in performing good deeds and avoiding sin?

A) It removes their free will completely.

B) It forces them to obey against their desire.

C) It does not remove their voluntary choice.

D) It applies only after their prophethood begins.

27. When prophets such as Abraham or Joseph made statements that appeared untrue, what permissible form of speech does the text say they employed?

A) Open lying (kidhb)

B) Metaphor (isti'ārah)

C) Dissimulation (tawriyah)

D) Abrogation (naskh)

28. How does the effect of God's special attention and granted means on the responsibilities of an infallible person?

A) It reduces their spiritual duties.

B) It makes their responsibilities heavier.

C) It exempts them from divine law.

D) It has no effect on their duties.

29. In the story of Moses (AS) and the Qibṭī, how does the text characterize the act that led to the man's death?

A) A premeditated murder.

B) A divinely commanded execution.

C) An intentional but justified homicide.

D) An unintentional striking.
